

Food Advisory Committee Promotes Yahoo Site

Do you YAHOO? The food advisory committee has set up a yahoo site “Missouri Local Public Health Inspectors” designed for regulators and industry to discuss food safety topics. The site is by invitation only but all it takes to get an invite is to send an email to kprescott@ci.springfield.mo.us . We are currently up to 39 members. Topics discussed recently include: angel food ministries, unique hand crafted cooking utensils, boiled peanuts and more. You can set your membership to receive individual emails, a daily digest or no email at all. Users can visit the site to view photos sent in, tap into links pertaining to food safety and cruise through past posts. The most important part of setting up a new yahoo account is to write down your ID and password so that you can access the site. The site is free. Contrary to popular belief our jobs are not “black and white” but many shades of gray and having others in the field available to bounce off ideas or ask questions is a great resource.
